ABSTRACT

A data analyzing method for a fault detection and classification system. The method includes extracting a set of raw data from a fault detection and classification system, separating the raw data for generating another set of classified data via a predetermined filtering condition, and utilizing a predetermined statistical method for analyzing the classified data.